

FREE class; Thriving in Dry Times – Inspiration for Gardeners

Scotts Valley, California

Registration is now open for a free gardening class that promises to inspire both the novice and experienced gardener in these times of restricted water use. The class will be held on June 13 and presented by Joy Albright-Souza of Albright-Souza Garden Design. Joy specializes in sustainable gardening techniques and the use of California native plants as well as plant palettes from compatible climates in other parts of the world. Draw inspiration from other cultures and continents that have coped with limited water for centuries and learn new ways to think about our own California gardening opportunities.

The class will offer drought tolerant plant combinations customized for Santa Cruz County, techniques for reducing water use in existing gardens and information for creating new gardens that can be enjoyed with minimal water-use. It is open to all residents of Santa Cruz County.

The class is free but attendees must register in advance.

To register call Scotts Valley Recreation Department at 831-438-3251

or register online at www.scottsvalley.org/parks/parks_recs.html

or see the Scotts Valley Recreation Summer Activity Guide available now.

Date: June 13, 2009

Time: 1-3 pm

Location: Scotts Valley Community Center, Kings Village Rd, Scotts Valley

Contact:

Joy Albright-Souza

Albright-Souza Garden Design

831-419-5994

design@albrightsouza.com